Going in an ambulance in an emergency

When someone dials 999 in an emergency, an ambulance like this might come. The person helping you is called a paramedic and he or she will be wearing a green uniform.

The paramedic will take you into the ambulance in a chair or on a stretcher, which is like a bed.

The paramedic will ask you some questions.
You might need to wear a mask to help you breathe.

If you are very ill the paramedic may need to use a machine which helps your heart to beat properly. This is called a defibrillator.

The paramedic may need you to remove some of your clothing. The paramedic will also check that you are breathing ok.

Try not to worry about going in an ambulance. The paramedic will take good care of you.
